Ben Belancik, Personal Trainer

Throughout my elementary school years I was active in baseball, basketball, and bowling. It wasn't until middle school when I began to go through difficult times and the weight started piling on. In high school I became more active, started walking as part as my exercise regime but then I was in a car accident. I couldn't exercise at all and the weight started coming on again.

When I started college I had hit 300 pounds and maintained that until I was about to get married and lost 20 pounds. I consulted with a doctor about weight loss surgery. He told me I had to lose 30 pounds first. After a few months of the right exercise and diet plan the weight started coming off and I decided not to have the surgery.

Since then I have maintained my 110 pound weight loss. I use exercise as a stress reliever, and manage my weight and eat smarter. I am so much happier. Since I had so much success with my journey I decided to become a personal trainer to teach others how to live a much healthier life. There are so many goals that people can have and while it may be just to live healthier, lose weight, build muscle, or get involved, I would love to help you set and achieve your goals.
